140 Main Street. JAMES PAYNE.

Barren than, by direction of the national committee, presented the name of Hon.
Geo. Hoadley, of Ohio, for temporary chairman, to be elected by the vote of H. D. McHenry were appointed to conduct him to the chair. Hoadley's approach to the platform was greeted with applause. Hoadley proceeded to address the committee and convention.
He thanked them for their complimentary notice in putting him in the chair.
He pledged himself to strict impartiality in the administration of the duties assigned to him. This was the only method by which he could fairly be regarded as chairman, he should be neither the friend nor the foe of any candidate, though he would be a friend to the cause of the people, in whose behalf he may be both earnest and partisan.
He took the ground that the representatives here were not delegates of individual States, but as representatives of indestructible States. (Substantive applause.) He proceeded with some laudation of the cause of the people, for which the convention would make no new error, which had its own vitality, and which would not depend for its future on the success or failure of its leaders, or be crushed out by its defeat. Their duty here was simply to declare the party will. The occasion was a great and important one.
At St. Louis four years ago, they placed in nomination two of the most prominent men of the nation.
The subsequent result was a repetition of the name of Samuel J.
Tilden was the occasion for another great and important result in the history of the party. They defeated cheering and waving fans. He asserted that they were certainly elected, as was Washington or Monroe. (Substantive applause.) He denounced the republican party as one of fraud, which cheated the people out of their choice, thus proving their inability to republican principles, but if the democratic party should again be successful, no cunning device or dis-onest artifice should rob them of the fruits of their victory. (Applause.)
Although the democrats failed to inquire their candidate for his cause was not worthy of it. They defeated him, and he was not elected. He asserted that they were certainly elected, as was

their inability to republican principles,
but if the democratic party should again
quire their candidate for his cause was
